SOUTHWYCK OPEN HOUSE

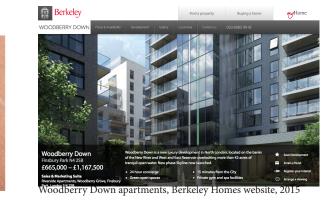

CONVERSATION TOPICS

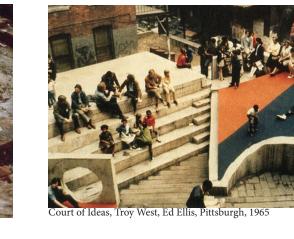

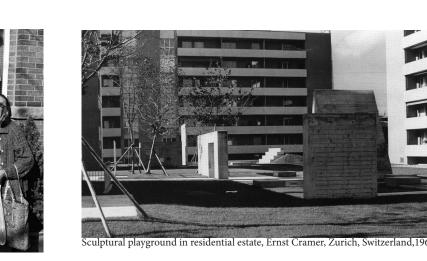

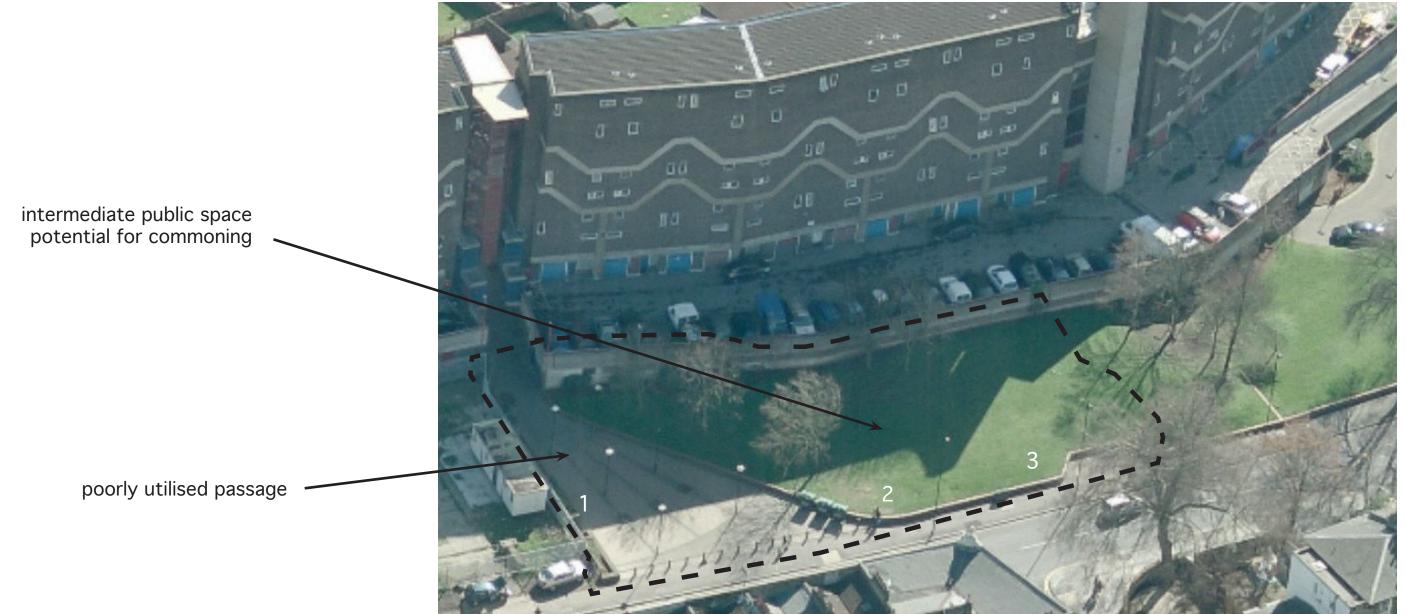

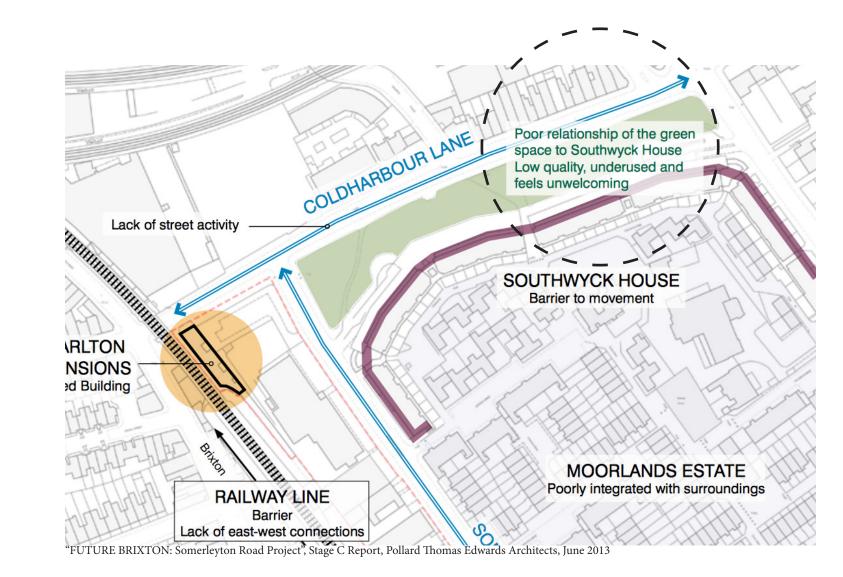

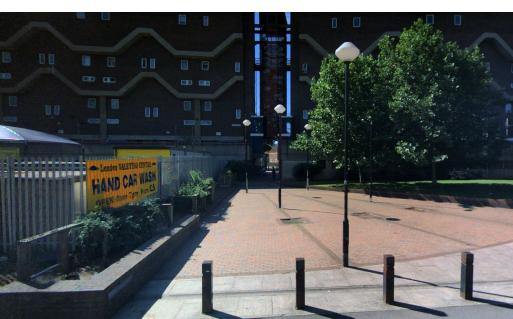

SITE INVESTIGATION

the plans and there is no opportunity to express my voice. I want to get involved" - Tameca, local resident "Of course it is a good idea. Develop the place, why not? It doesn't exclude me, I am happy about it" - Sonny, local Mixed feelings over Somerleyton Road developments, brixtonblog.org, July 2013

edge 1 hard edge, unwelcoming boundary and pathway edge 2 corner threshold, used for bins / potential sitting space

separation of private from public could be softened

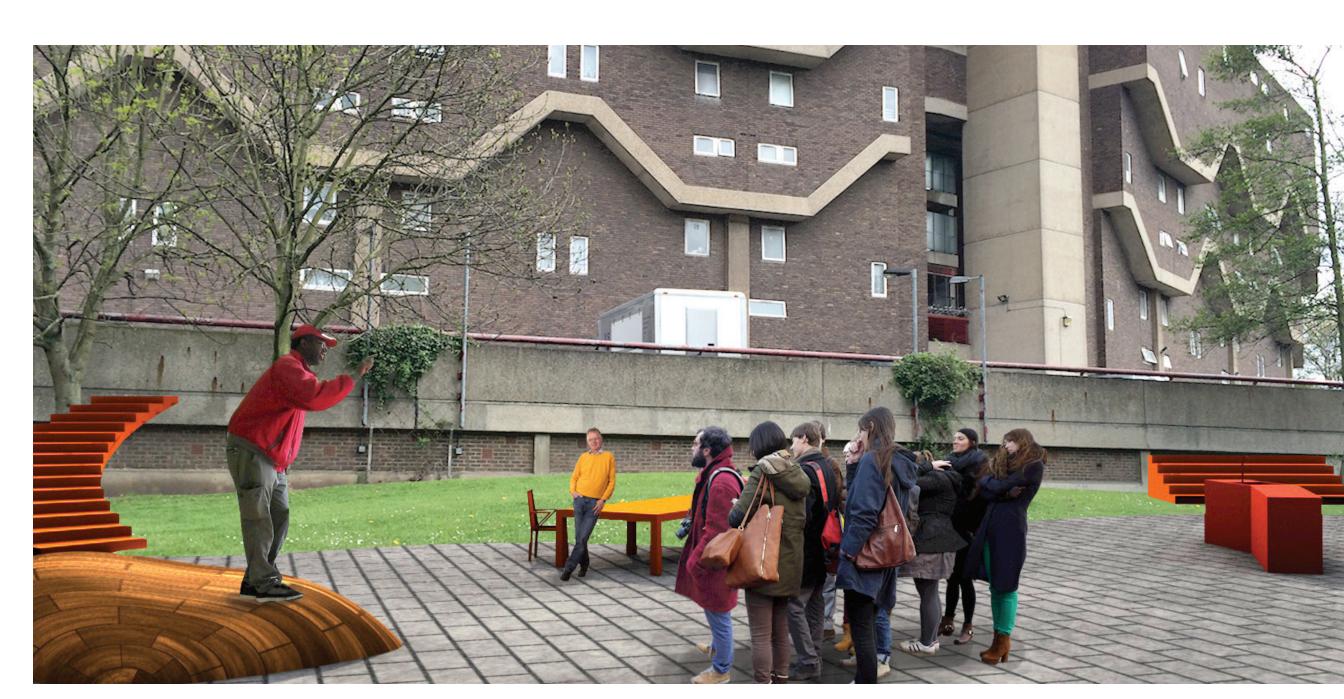

DESIGN PROPOSAL

articulate a conversation between the two realms. By involving the community in the placement and the appropriation of these elements, we anticipate that resident participation will encourage a discussion to develop from the initial stages and evolve as the space changes according to the occasion.

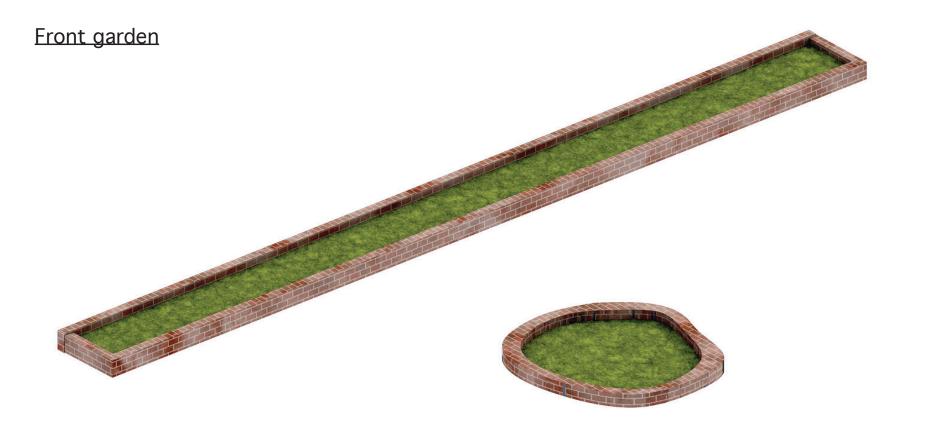

Our idea of a re-politicization of public space brings familiar el- Due to the specific facade of the Southwyck house, this comements of the household out into the street in order to visually mon in-between space would also function as a mechanism to

Houshold Elements:

These elements are positioned in the pathway area in-front of the entrance to the estate in a way that will address the flow of people coming and going while also functioning as an area for communal gardening

Flooring

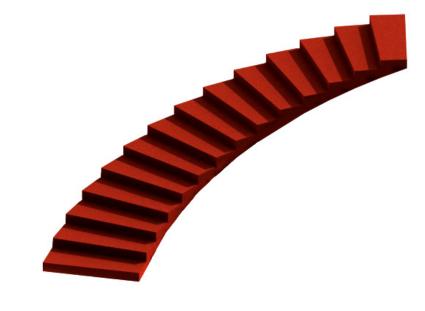

An artificial rock made to resemble laminate flooring incorporates the element of home interiors in a natural setting

Moveable chairs

Moveable chairs allow small groups to gather and form pockets of concentrated ac-

Staircase

The staircase is an emblematic yet functional architectural element that lends itself to be used in many different ways

Communal table

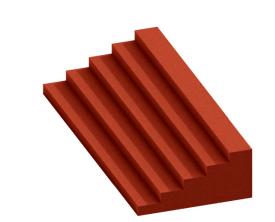

A long communal table in the centre of the space emphasizes the key characteristics of the urban commons, encouraging people to share the same space and to find different ways to use it

Tap water

The provision of drinking water in public places is a great way of offering people a free refreshment while they spend time outdoors

Stoop

The stoop is commonly used as an in-between space for sitting and watching the goings on of the street